

Law Enforcement Liaison Project

Operation Glow

OPERATION GLOW

Law Enforcement Liaison (LEL) Project involving seven law enforcement agencies: Alaska State Troopers, Fairbanks Police, North Pole Police, Airport Police, University of Alaska Police, United States Air Force Security Forces, and Ft. Wainwright Police.

Law Enforcement Liaison Project

McDonald's USA

Operation Glow

Logistics for Operation Glow

- POLICE AGENCIES

- Alaska State Troopers

- Fairbanks Police

- North Pole Police

- UAF Police

- Airport Police

- USAF Security Forces

- Ft. Wainwright Police

- Volunteers In Policing

- MATERIALS

- 8,000 Glow Sticks
- 8,000 Custom Lanyards
- 2,318 Snack Wraps, 3 Pk. Cookies, Cinnamon Melts, and Ice Cream Cones—McDonald's
- 230 $1.00 off cards—Wendy's
- 230 Buy one, get 2nd for $.99--Subway
- 150 Chalupa's—Taco Bell
- 79 Personal Pans—Pizza Hut

- Total: 3,007 coupon giveaways

From Left to right: Sgt. Rick Roberts (AST), Sgt. Tom Cooper (NPPD), Officer Russell L. Fett (FTWWPD), Officer Ace Adams (FPD), Officer Marc Poeschel (UAFPD), Officer Beverly Moore (Airport PD), SrA Bradley Hickey (USAF Security Forces), and Alana Malloy (FPD).

Fairbanks Daily News Miner

October 30, 2007

Mayoral election today

By CHRIS ESHLEMAN
eshleman@newsminer.com

Officers in the city of Fairbanks will hand out glow sticks to voters at the polls today to elect a mayor in a runoff election, in which Terry Stiver faces Terry Strie, four weeks after a fire-ignited ballot led to produce a clear-cut from the city's general

Three polling places inside Fairbanks city limits will be open between 7 a.m. and 8 p.m. Workers will release early results later tonight and counting the ballots. The night-issue ballot focuses on the mayor's race. The election will be sworn into a three-term mayor that begins as a nonprofit director, won 51 percent of the vote in the Oct. 23 race, leaving her shy of the 51 percent needed to win. Stiver, a businesswoman-councilwoman,

ON THE GLOW

Police officers will hand out 8,000 glow sticks, along with coupons to local restaurants, to trick-or-treaters on Halloween night who display good safety techniques, such as walking on sidewalks or carrying flashlights. The goal, called Operation Glow, is to provide a safe trick-or-treating experience for youngsters. Preparing the glow sticks, from left, are Moses Villalobos of Airport Police Department, Alaska State Troopers Austin Macdonald and Jeremy Stone, Fairbanks Police Lt. Dan Welborn, Dave McKilligan of Fort Wainwright Police Department, Clay Faris of University Police Department, and Andrew Adams with the Fairbanks Police Department.

Remodeling work led to blackmail Allen claim

By DAN IOLI
Associated Press

ANCHORAGE — The Alaska oil field services company that he thought he was providing to U.S. Sen. Ted St he believed he was being blackmailed by his nephew, Dave Anderson, after Allen sent VECO employees to remodel the Alaska home of Stevens, the longest serving Republican in U.S. Senate history.

Details about Allen's accusation were not discussed in court, and Allen's attorney, later tonight ballots. The ballot focuses on the mayor's race. The election will be sworn into a three-term mayor that begins director, won the runoff election, in which Terry Stiver faces Terry Strie, four weeks after a fire-ignited ballot led to produce a clear-cut from the city's general opened?

in fatal fire

Sourdough Jack sez:

Whatever yer join' today, like sure ya

Police officers will hand out 8,000 glow sticks, along with coupons to local restaurants, to trick-or-treaters on Halloween night who display good safety techniques, such as walking on sidewalks or carrying flashlights. The goal, called Operation Glow, is to provide a safe trick-or-treating experience for youngsters. Preparing the glow sticks, from left, are Moses Villalobos of Airport Police Department, Alaska State Troopers Austin Macdonald and Jeremy Stone, Fairbanks Police Lt. Dan Welborn, Dave McKilligan of Fort Wainwright Police Department, Clay Faris of University Police Department, and Andrew Adams with the Fairbanks Police Department.

An illuminating approach to Halloween fun

By CHRIS FREIBERG
cfreiberg@newsminer.com

Local police agencies will have extra patrols out Halloween night to hand out glow sticks to youngsters.

Officers from Fairbanks Police, North Pole Police, Alaska State Troopers, Airport Police, Eielson Air Force Security Police and the Fort Wainwright Police will be in neighborhoods between 6-8:30 p.m. to give out the luminous tubes and to promote safety on a night when many children will be going door-to-door looking for treats.

Some children wear creepy, dark-colored costumes for the holiday, which are great at scaring people, but difficult for drivers to see. Snowfall can make conditions even worse, so police hope the glow sticks will help visibility.

"It gives them a bit more lighting for motorists to look out for," Fairbanks Police Lt. Dan Welborn said.

More than 8,000 glow sticks and custom lanyards have been distributed to law enforcement agencies to be given out Halloween night. The $11,000 grant that is making the project possible comes from the federal government through the Alaska Highway Safety Office. In addition to the four extra patrol cars out that night that will be dedicated to keeping trick-or-treaters safe, several off-duty officers have volunteered their time for the evening, Welborn said.

This is the first time Fairbanks police have gone out on such a mission during Halloween.

Cindy Casen, administrator for the Alaska Highway Safety Office, said the project is patterned after similar Halloween events in Washington and Oregon.

Police also will be handing out coupons for local restaurants to kids they observe trick-or-treating safely by, for example,

Please see GLOW, Page 47

More than 1 in 10 high schools in America dubbed 'd'

after A VECO ses to the Ala of Stev longest Republic Senate h Detail Allen's were not in on Allen's Robert I he could rate.

Ande not bee with bla Allen in the trial off Rep. VI who is least $2 his sup Allen from J Allen a spent a sad dis "It v

North Pole Police Department Officer Joe Hames

Officer Tony Adlesperger, University of Alaska PD, makes friends with “Trick-or-Treaters on campus.

Officer Clay Faris of UAFPD and Sgt. Moses Villalobos of Airport Police prepare glow sticks.

Custom made lanyard for Operation Glow

Fairbanks Airport
Police Officer Kocsis
passes out Glow
Sticks and food
coupons while telling kids to be safe for Halloween.

Trooper Edwin Carlson of AST-D Detachment during Operation Glow

“THE THING”

Lt. Jim Geier of the Fairbanks Police makes a couple of youngsters safer in the Aurora Subdivision during Operation Glow.

Officer Alana Malloy and Officer Avery Thompson
“showing the ropes” to a new recruit.

From Left to right: Volunteers In Policing at a briefing for Operation Glow. Carl Johnson, Gil Castillo, Stan Majors, and Anna Mouton. Pictured in foreground are Dispatcher Temeka Rott and Officer Malloy, both with Fairbanks Police.

Officer Doug Welborn activates a handful of glow sticks for Trick-or-Treaters (like the one above) in the Taku Subdivision.

Ft. Wainwright Police—Sgt. McKillican

Operation Glow Briefing at FPD

Lt. Dan Welborn

Officer Ace Adams

Fairbanks was decorated well for Halloween. A young firefighter and Alaska State Trooper pick up some glow sticks.

Carl Johnson of the VIP's discusses plans for Operation Glow with fellow VIP Gil Castillo. Sgt. McKillican of Ft. Wainwright Police is in the background.

